CHARADE.

IN THREE PARTS.

My first is a country on the other side of the world, with a population of about 400,000,000. The people subsist chiefly on rice and rats, and the chief product of the country is

TEA.

My second as soon in this country, consists of the third leaves of several plants of the genus thea, belonging to the natural order of Tenstromiacea. The leaves are two or three inches long, and half an inch to an inch broad, and of different oblong shape. These leaves, when properly prepared, make a very delicious and gently stimulating beverage, which is among women very much the same as Thackeray says the cigar is among men—the great unbosomer of secrets.

My third is just the same place as my whole, being the best place in the State of Maine to buy the best

Teas, Coffees, Spices, &c. &c.,

For the least money.

THE ANSWER
My First is CHINA
My Second is TEA
My Third is STORE.

And my whole is the celebrated establishment called the CHINA TEA STORE.

The attention of families in the Country is respectfully called to the fact that they can save considerable money and get a better article if they will club together and send to the CHINA TEA STORE. Whole neighborhoods will find you the same.

We also have always a fresh and perfect stock of CANNED GOODS and all FANCY GROCERIES. EVERYTHING WARRANTED.

THE PORTLAND
KEROSENE OIL COMPANY
Would inform the public, that they continue to Manufacture
PORTLAND KEROSENE OIL.

The prevalence of a large quantity of inferior and dangerous oils in the market, at a cheap price—many of which are little better than Asphalt itself—and the existence of false reports in regard to the PORTLAND KEROSENE OIL, render it a matter of justice to ourselves, as well as safety to consumers, that some notice should be taken of these facts. Therefore, we again present an advertisement, and would call attention to the high standard of our Oils. THE REFINED PETROLEUM, the fire test of which is 120 DEGREES FAHRENHEIT, and often reaches considerably higher, we would say, that we are determined to maintain their long established reputation.
PORTLAND KEROSENE OIL COMPANY.

We quote from chap. 39 R. S. 1871, the title of said chapter being "Inspection and Sale of Manufactured Articles."

SECT. 31. Every person and corporation engaged in manufacturing petroleum, coal oil or burning fluid, shall cause every cask, or other vessel thereof to be so inspected and marked, by a sworn inspector. And if any person manufactures or sells such oil or burning fluid not so inspected and marked, in the State or that has not been so inspected and marked, unsafe for illuminating purposes, he shall pay a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned six months in the county jail, upon indictment therefor.

PEREGRINATIONS.

A NIGHT IN VIENNA—A FEARFUL AWAKENING—A PAIR OF BOOTS AND A LONG DISCOURSE SOMEWHERE FOUND IN THEM—A VISIT TO THE GREAT EXHIBITION, AND A LOT OF DRY FIGURES.

My first night in Vienna will ever remain anything but a pleasant remembrance. I had two many bed-fellows. They attacked and defaced the little pink charts their Italian colabourers had sketched upon my suffering cuticle, with as much vigilence as if they were members of the Austrian cabinet, re arranging to suit themselves the map of Europe, by blotting out the country so long held by the Croats before Solferino and Magenta restored Italy from the sight and possession of the white coats. (The foregoing has the color of a pun—not intended, to be sure, but its no fault to attempt to whitewash facts—the fleas were "villains of the deepest dye.") Afterwards I experienced no trouble from these nocturnal visitors, from the fact, I suppose, that they were so busy on their first raid that their energies were completely exhausted.

At early dawn I lay for a while meditating on the afflictions poor human nature is subject to, in this world. My tormentors had ceased sapping and mining, and I was sinking into a gentle doze, when a slight noise in the room startled my eyelids open, and I caught a glimpse of my coat-tails and the ends of my suspenders just as they were whisked out of the door, by an invisible hand. The door closed and I could hear a light footstep rapidly descending the staircase outside. Here was a dilemma! No wonder correspondents denounced Vienna landlords as robbers! Here I was in a strange land, my clothes all gone to parts unknown, my purse and letter of credit with them. What was to be done! I arose cautiously and gazed about bewildered. A queer snapping noise arose from the court-yard, and looking out, I saw my missing dry goods hanging on a line and a muscular female pounding them with a small telegraph pole or something that looked like it. Then she brushed them with a small broom, then with a tar brush, which operation completed, she hung them over her arm and started for the stairs. To return was prudent, and in ten seconds, as I peeped out from under the bed-clothes, that robust damsel had re entered the room, replaced my apparel on the chair from whence she removed it, buzzed my companion's suit and noiselessly retired. In two minutes more I was dressed, and when she returned, was finishing the lacing of my boots. She smiled and remarked that it was a good morning. I said "ja." Then she walked up to me and delivered a short oration in German. I knew she said something about boots, but I was so flustered that I didn't catch the meaning. At any rate it would do no harm to acquiesce to what she remarked, and so I said "ja" again. She hurried out of the room, but immediately returned with boot brush and blacking in hand. Another short speech in German—too much for me again, but I smiled and observed "ja." Instantly the insensible woman pulled a chair up in front of me, seized my foot and put it on the chair, pectorated on the brush and commenced rubbing my not over-clean boot. But in vain. She held my ankle and in spite of my struggles didn't leave the leather bore a shine never once! New York boot-black of ten years' experience. I tried to tell her in German that it was no consequence—I could black my own boots—that, in fact, I preferred to, rather than allow a woman to do the polishing. But my German was so complete a failure, that she told me she didn't understand. I submitted in despair, though so much against my mind that it was hard work to repress it, and running out of the door. She put my foot down from the chair very much as I would handle a kitten; then up went the other pedestal in her strong grasp and the brush commenced to ply again. Was ever a fellow in such a predicament? B. the a man told it as a matter of course. My fe... tells me he shall remember the fe... formed, until his latest breath. In fact, I remember it, it must have been considerable... took good care never to forget... boots outside the door o'nights, after that.

Fancy a maid-of-all-work in Am... blacking boots! And yet they do such menial work" in all parts of Europe. A gentleman whom I met on the ocean at sea, on being told that "hired girls" in the States would consider it a degradation to do such work remarked more forcibly than graceful... if a girl at work for his family put... hire he would kick her out of the house. And our lodgings in London, one morning when we rose early in order to reach an excursion train, and our boots had not come up, I broke the bell-wire and then started for the kitchen where I found two girls at work shining up the boots and shoes of all the lodgers. Oh, gain who do housework in Yankee land! thankful that you are on this side of the Atlantic!

Wherever we went in Europe, whether in Great Britain or on the Continent, we saw women at work in the fields, hoeing, digging, raking and pitching hay and grain, holding plows, sometimes, and in fact engaged in almost every sort of heavy farm labor. In France as, nearly every railroad crossing an old woman is "flagman" and tends the gates, as the trains go by, holding her flag up at "shoulder arms" and with the left hand touching the man's glazed hat she wears. In the Belgian cities all the milkmen are women and each with the assistance of a big dog in harness, runs about over tiles with large milk cans on each side of a wheeled kennel for the dog to draw. Even in Holland the women of the lower classes are regarded as drudges of burden, soldiers, as they are frequently seen harnessed along side with a dog in the shafts, hauling along the canal boats filled with produce, while the lazy husband, brother or father sits and smokes his pipe. In France, nearly every female over... part of the labor seems... their living by hard labor. You find them employed in stores and restaurants as clerks, cashiers, and saleswomen. They sweep the streets, pump the water by which the streets are sprinkled, carry wood and water, act as "expressmen"—even clean boots on the streets. A great deal of building was going on in Vienna the past summer, and, strange as it may seem, the majority of the mortar carriers employed were women, and thousands of them labored in gangs, closely watched by overseers. At the first glance it is difficult to distinguish these women from the male workmen, as the latter are clad in big baggy breeches like petticoats, and the former wear boots and petticoats like breeches. It was safe, however, if one gang carried heavier loads than the others, to set them down as women. These toilers are old, middle-aged and young, all apparently strong and healthy. Their wages vary from 90 kreutzers (35 cents) to one florin and 10 kreutzers (45 cents) per day of eleven hours—the same as the Stonaks or men laborers. At noon they make their dinners on "schwartz brod und schinken"—black bread and bacon—washed down by liberal potations of beer, and I am told by a well informed gentleman who possesses considerable real estate in the Austrian capital, that most of them sleep about the buildings where they are employed on piles of shavings, or in sheds or rude shelters near their work. This class is infinitely harder worked and worse treated than the servant girls in families, and the wages of the latter do not average more than $10 or $12 per annum.

——But enough of the "woman question" in Europe. There is a fine field for reformers. If the working women of this country could have a brief experience among their foreign sisters, they would certainly come back thinking God that they were born in America.

I started to tell my readers how I went to the Great Exhibition. Imagine the foregoing digression to have been delivered on the way. We enter a horse car, (a very shabby, "shackling" sort of vehicle compared with the English or American manufacture) on the Ringstrasse, ride up some distance on that beautiful broad street, then enter the Prater-strasse (or Park street). The conductor in return for your fare, tears a leaf out of a tiny book and gives it to you. The leaves are numbered, and those remaining when he goes off duty, show how many fares he has taken during the day. No "knocking down" is tolerated, and I am told that defaulters are constantly on the watch to see that conductors give passengers the proper tickets. The "Wiener Pferdebahn Gesellschaft" did not follow the course of the hotel keepers in raising prices for the Exhibition season—oh no! They just divided each of their "courses" into three, and then obtained three fares where they got only one before!

While we are talking the car has steadily though slowly rolled on. Booths, kiosks and beer gardens seem to usurp the places of the chestnut groves on either hand. A curious structure shaped like a huge steam boat and occupied as a circus, appears on our left. Then more beer gardens—a great wooden building with "Schauspielhaus" in big letters painted on each of its numerous gables—more beer gardens—and then, as we happen to look out the front end of the car, far upon the air we see, over the trees and intervening buildings, a great imperial crown, glittering with gold and sparkling with gems. It is on the apex of the dome of the Exhibition building, and as we draw nearer the monster dome itself appears, graceful in its proportions, as light, apparently, as a balloon, seeming to float in the sky. I got excited and enthusiastic. I couldn't help it. Here was the Mecca of my pilgrimage—the Weltausstellung!

The car halts at the fine station especially fitted up for visitors to the Exhibition, and we dismount with the crowd. There is no need of cautioning the way to the gate, everybody goes in that direction. A few rods traversed, we pay our florin (about 90 cents) at one of the half-dozen ticket windows, receive in return a piece of flimsy paper cover... [illegible] language.

In the grounds of the main building, and [illegible] Machinery Hall, and [illegible] feet long, connected with which are a number of smaller structures. All these buildings are of an equally substantial and finished character with the "Palace of Industry," and scattered all over the grounds are annexes, pavilions, and ornamental cottages of every character, from the imperial pavilion to a Turkish. The Palace of Industry [illegible] with Italian windows on its west [illegible] style, near by [illegible] is a Mohammedan Mosque, a Turkish Bazaar, a Persian miniature palace for the Shah ("Mr. Shaw of Persia," Punch calls him,) and other Oriental buildings. Very interesting are the "national dwellings," or specimens of the homes of the poorer classes of nearly all the nations of the world. An Esquimaux fur hut, (with a "dummy" family in furs in it,) a Swedish peasant's house, an Arabian hut, a Russian inn, a Swiss chalet, an Arab tent, an Indian wigwam, [illegible] in fact a man of almost any nationality can find a dwelling of his country, which seems to have been taken bodily from its native place and transported intact to the Exhibition grounds. Nearly all peoples and religions can also find places of worship in this miniature world, and among other religious edifices may be found a Greek chapel, a Buddhist temple and a Turkish minaret. Austria and Sweden each exhibit a school house, and on my first visit to the Exhibition my soul was delighted by finding a genuine, Yankee rural school house—built of wood and fitted complete with seats, desks, books and maps, for all the world to examine. I was told that it had more visitors than any building outside of the three Great Exhibition halls, and can well believe it, for there is nothing in America that an educated foreigner is more curious about than our free school system. The little temple of learning was crowded each time I entered it, and the visitors were examining every part with great minuteness.

The refreshment department is of course ably provided for, of and whatever nationality he may be, a visitor can find his home food and drink prepared and served by his countrymen. He may drink black coffee and smoke a narghile while sitting cross legged on the divans of the Turkish restaurant, eat rice and birds nest pudding (and rats, probably if he wishes,) with chopsticks in the Chinese establishment, sip fiery brandy and eat caviare with the Russians, dip Lonej with a wooden spoon and masticate hard bread and dry cheese in the Swiss chalet, drink Rhein wein and beer and eat Schwartz-brod and Limburgher with the Germans, partake of all the delicacies of French cookery at a branch of the celebrated Trois Freres' establishment from Paris, and sit down to baked beans and brown bread, in one of the several American eating houses on the grounds. But the prices—ah, the prices! A week's board inside the Exhibition walls would cost a small fortune. Let me state, however, that the proprietors of the American soda fountains sold their refreshing beverage for fifteen kreutzers a glass or about seven cents, which is cheaper than on this side of the water. Sharp fellows those soda-water men, they did an immense business. They persuaded the Viennese that the correct thing was to suck soda through a straw, as many American druggists are taken, and being a novelty the custom spread like wild-fire. Besides, the druggists had an advantage, for by use of the straws several persons could imbibe from one glass at a time. It was a sight well worth seeing that I noticed one day—three grave and reverend seigneurs with their grizzly heads solemnly bending over one glass of soda, and sucking for dear life at the straw under his gray moustache, evidently fearing his co partakers would get the most. The American bars were usually surrounded by crowds and the seductive beverages there sold by the most startling names, were evidently favorites. The most popular drink, however, on the grounds, as in every place where German is spoken, is beer. Dreher's, Vienna, Pilsener, Bavarian, and goodness knows how many more varieties, each had a pavilion by itself and many of the breweries had large buildings where customers could draw "direct from the wood" for themselves. Beer is the universal drink all over Europe, and has laid the foundation for the "universal language," for its name is pronounced pretty much the same everywhere. The German beer is much lighter than the English, and judging by the immense quantities consumed and the fact that in all Germany I did not see a drunken man, it cannot be so "heady." People drink it with every meal—men, women and children—for as a rule the drinking of beer, in summer especially, is far from good. The miserable parodies generally sold as "lager" in this country bear no more resemblance to the genuine article than dish water does to Hat Case, and when Americans drink the horrible decoctions of willow bark and resin retailed in the States, imagining they are imbibing German beer, they are terribly taken in.

Gentle reader, did you ever notice that I am "prone to wander?" I fear so. Perhaps talking of beer led me astray, and lest you forget what I came near forgetting—that I was endeavoring to convey an idea of the exterior of the Vienna Exhibition—I shall return to my muttons and give another little dish of statistical and historical information concerning the Prater. Persons not of a statistical and historical turn of mind, may omit this.

The Prater, on which the Exhibition is held, is an extensive park of wood and lawn, some distance from the stadt or central part of the city, and belongs by courtesy to the people, though nobody but royalty and nobility was admitted to its precincts till 1766. In that year the emperor Joseph II. granted free admission to the park, and since then it has been a favorite resort. That portion covered by the Exhibition is nearly five square miles in extent, and is therefore about five times the size of the French Exposition of 1867. It is bounded by the "beautiful blue Danube" (an insignificant, dirty little stream by the way) and is pleasantly diversified by meadows and groves. In former times, before the people were admitted, the Imperial Court made it the scene of hunts, festivals, promenades and fireworks without number, and only the very "top cream" could ride in it. It therefore witnessed many festive occasions before the Exhibition was dreamed of, the most magnificent, perhaps, being the grand Fest in 1854, on the occasion of the Emperor's marriage.

The present Emperor, after visiting the Paris Exposition, determined to remodel (if the term be allowable) and beautify the Prater somewhat after the plan of the Bois de Boulogne, and his orders have been carried out with such effect that it is universally admitted that the site is worthy the Exhibition.

Enough of the Prater and the exterior of the wonderful structures upon it. My next shall treat of what is to be seen inside the Palace of Industry.

FATHER HYACINTHE TO THE ALLIANCE.

The following letter from Father Hyacinthe to the Evangelical Alliance was read at the session of Wednesday:

GENEVA, Sept. 9, 1873.

To the members of the Evangelical Alliance at New York:

Gentlemen—When I accepted, now more than a year ago, the invitation which your committee did me the honor to send me for the meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, it could not conjecture the peculiar position which would [illegible] the execution of my promise. While sickness forced me to [illegible] which my heart upon, and do not regret those engagements, for they opened a new development of reform to which is attached, in my opinion the salvation of the Catholic church. In confiding to me a task much beyond my individual powers, but which He will aid me, if I trust, to perform, God has imposed upon me [illegible] duties which take precedence of all others. Will you excuse me, then gentlemen, if in heart alone I join you? By its warm impulses, my whole being goes out to you. For a long time already I have counted friends among your ranks. Indeed, I can call you all by that name, for united by faith in the same Christ, the only Son of God and the Redeemer of men, you are laboring to bring together on common ground the different Christian confessions which have been so sadly, and until now so irremediably, separated. My ambition, I confess, is still higher. When you are satisfied with an alliance I would desire an organic and vital unity. I believe this unity to be the future destinies of the christian church, because I discover in it its primative traditions, and above all it is in the will of its divine founder. If, like that weakened church of the Apocalyps all Christianity were not fallen from its first love, it would not be so difficult for it to realize, or even also, to conserve the joyous mystery of its unity. Time does not permit me, gentlemen, so give you the details of the particular work in which I am laboring at Geneva and which you wish to honor with your sympathetic interest. Besides, this work is sufficiently known to you through the press. I venture to count it as laid upon the Rev. Pastor Frank Coulin, who, [illegible] to you in his letter, to speak to you of my plans. Will you accept, gentlemen, with renewed expression of my deep felt regrets, that also of my most respectful and affectionately devoted regards in our common Master and Saviour.

HYACINTHE LOYSON.

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH OUR DAUGHTERS? Apropos of Mrs. Livermore's lecture on the above important question, the Davenport Democrat thus sensibly answers:

Teach them self reliance.
Teach them to make bread
Teach them to make shirts.
Teach them to keep up their bills.
Teach them not to wear false hair.
Teach them not to paint and powder.
Teach them to wear thick, warm shoes
Teach them how to wash and iron clothes
Teach them to rise in the way they should go.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

[From Harper's Weekly.]

It is a favorite fancy of certain doctrinaires that the modern Democratic party is the great, original, American party, and that all others are but various forms of opposition to it. The platform of the recent Ohio Democratic Convention, which is the last revelation of party orthodoxy, begins by declaring with a solemnity which the artless unconsciousness of absurdity makes only the more delightful: "The Democratic party . . . stands by its principles, which are suited to all times and circumstances." In the old story the master charges his servant, "If you can't get cake, get smelts." And the famous thief remarked, "I prigs purses when I can—and pocket-handkerchiefs when I can't." The Democratic principles which are suited to all times and places are reduced by history to one—the principle, in Silas Wright's phrase, of "carrying off the spoils," if possible.

After the Constitution was adopted, the two antagonistic views in the Convention naturally became the platforms of two parties: the Federal, and the Jeffersonian or the National Republican. The first magnified, and the second belittled, the power of the national government. John Adams would have had it certain sacredness attach to the Presidential person. Thomas Jefferson called the whole national system "a department of foreign affairs." The second war with Great Britain, which was warmly opposed by the Federalists, and in which we gained a high fame for naval gallantry, and little else, destroyed that party. The wound of the Revolution was too fresh to allow the country to regard with favor a party which seemed British, and Mr. Monroe had but one electoral vote against him for his second term. Now, that the National Republican party was very different, from what has been recently known as the Democratic, is evident enough. In the session of 1815 the Bank of the United States was chartered. Mr. Calhoun, Chairman of the Finance Committee, reported the bill. It was supported by the National Republican, and opposed by the Federal party. Henry Clay, Calhoun, Lowndes, Forsyth, I. W., Taylor, and Ingham were its especial friends. Daniel Webster was its great opponent. Henry Clay was as good a National Republican as Horatio Seymour is modern Democrat.

Again, in 1816, the protective policy was sustained by Lowndes, Calhoun, and Forsyth, National Republican leaders, and it was opposed by Mr. Webster and the New England members. So, in 1824, Governor Yates, of New York, recommended protection. In 1827, a State Convention was held at Albany which declared it to be the duty of Congress to pass protective laws; and Ambrose Spencer, Samuel Young, Benjamin Knower, and other National Republicans were leading members. Was modern Democracy the heir of these views? In 1827 the New York Legislature unanimously passed resolutions for protection, and even General Jackson wrote that he was in favor of a judicious tariff. Up to this time where was the great, original, American party known as the modern Democratic? Did the principles "which are suited to all times and circumstances" charter a bank in 1815, and destroy it twenty years afterward? Did they insist upon protection from 1810 to 1820, and then proclaim free trade? The Democratic party, as we of this generation have known it, the anti-bank, anti-tariff, anti-internal improvement, hard money party, was the party of Jackson and Van Buren. Henry Clay was the last leader of the old National Republican organization, which merged with Antimasonry in the Whig party.

But if the Jeffersonian doctrines of the limited function of government in general, and of the very narrow bounds of our national government in particular, were not acknowledged by the National Republicans, who chartered the bank and passed protective tariffs, how much less has its great cardinal doctrine of human rights and equality ever been recognized by the Democratic party! The Ohio Democratic platform calmly says that the party "insists upon equal and exact justice to all men?" Since when? The antislavery agitation began with the administration of Jackson. All that Garrison and his friends demanded was equal and exact justice to all men. But Jackson's Post Master General broke open the mails to make justice more secure, and Van Buren in his message denounced the Abolitionists as provoking "popular indignation" by the implied approval of the mobs and riots that assailed them. Jeffersonian doctrines! Equal and exact justice to all men! Why, from its beginning the Democratic or Jackson party was the mere flexible machine of slaveholders, and its policy for a generation before the war was monstrous inequality and absolute injustice. Its adherents began to suspect it in 1840. They saw it clearly in '48. In 1855 those who held to the original faith of Jefferson left the ranks, and united with the Whigs in the Republican party. And now, when that party is supreme, slavery despite the Democratic party, abolished, and the Democratic theory of slavery annihilated, the party of the principles that are "suited to all times and circumstances" blandly declares that it holds to equal and exact justice to all men, which is precisely as true as that it is the great, original, American party.

When the Democratic party last year nominated Mr. Greeley, it was certainly a comical proof that what it now calls its principles, were "suited to all times and circumstances." They stand for no policy, no measures, no principles. They are only meetings of politicians, whose party name is fatally associated with the national disgrace of slavery, and who seem to suppose that by "resolving" themselves to be virtuous, they will be thought by the country safer guardians of its liberties, and peace, and prosperity than those who have secured liberty and conquered peace. There may be sharp criticism of the Republican party, and by unwise and reckless action its hold upon the country may be relaxed; but so long as the alternative is the Republican party or the Democratic, the Republicans are secure. Poor Mr. Greeley learned that truth last year, and it broke his heart.

The German Minister at Washington has just received intelligence that Madame Von Bismarck is not only not dead but not sick. The story was probably invented by the ultramontanists to coincide with the arrival of Victor Emanuel at Berlin, so that it would appear that Bismarck had suffered the affliction for the King of Italy.

Benjamin Dean declines the Democratic candidacy for Congress in the third Massachusetts district, and says of the convention which nominated him: "A portion of the convention advocated making no nomination which meant an abandonment of the field, while a considerable number favored the nomination of a Republican candidate. A convention which contained so large a number demoralized in their fealty to the party they were elected to represent cannot expect its nomination to be accepted."

The Tribune thinks there will be a union of all the Democratic organizations in New York city in the coming election.

The Charleston (S. C.) Courier says the expected imports of specie will not give Southern planters the required relief and demands the increased issue of greenbacks. It asks President Grant in the name of the South especially to call an extra session of Congress to consider the financial situation.

While arresting a ruffian in 70th street, New York, Sunday evening officer Regan was assailed with beer glasses and other missiles and stabbed in the back. He held on, nevertheless, to his man, and other officers coming to the rescue clubbed back the would-be rescuers.

Wallace, son of Jacob Kissenger, aged nine years, residing at Tulpehocken creek, three miles from Reading, Pa., was shot through the left lung and instantly killed Saturday afternoon by a young man residing in Reading, who has since escaped. The case was one of deliberate murder.

A wealthy farmer named Adams, residing in Greenwich township, twenty-two miles from Reading, Pa., who is said to have drawn a considerable amount of money from the bank, was attacked by several men near his residence on Friday night last, murdered and robbed. The murderers escaped.

Ship Tasmania on the 7th inst fell in with ship Isle of the Sky from Prospero for New York with rudder and masts gone and every sail and rope blown away. The crew had been three days without water and were nearly all disabled and wished to leave the vessel. The captain of the Tasmania took them off and brought them to New Orleans. The captain and crew fired the Isle of the Sky before leaving her.

At the elections in France to fill vacancies in the Assembly, M. de Remusat has been chosen from Haute Garonne, beating the nephew of the late Marshal Ney, the candidate of the Right. In the three other Departments, Puy de Dome, Lore and Nievre, the Republicans were chosen by overwhelming majorities.

A very funny story is told by the Chicago Tribune about the Bucyrus Forum, a patent inside newspaper printed in Ohio, which has come to grief all on account of its insides. The Bucyrus Forum is described as one of the straight-haced, never say-die, roaring Democratic newspapers, and is a staunch supporter of Allen, the Democratic candidate for governor of Ohio. But last week, among the faithful in Bucyrus, there was great consternation when they read in the patent inside the following paragraph:

The great antiquity of Bill Allen is beyond question, as Homer speaks of him, under the alias of "Stentor." After Noyes takes some of the wind out of him, he said the will be offered a situation to act as fog horn on the coast of Rhode Island.

The editor tried to make an apology, and explain patent insides, but the countrymen will understand nothing except that the above paragraph was in the Bucyrus Forum, and that the Bucyrus Forum is recommending Bill Allen for a fog horn on the Rhode Island coast. They won't be comforted. The Forum is a backslider, a traitor, a black Republican, and they are abandoning the Bucyrus Forum to its fate, certain that it will come to some ignominious end.

PROMPT WORK. The Associated Press Courier, who carried the report of the Modoc execution from Klamath to the telegraph station at Jacksonville, Oregon, rode a distance 92 miles in 9 hours and fifty-five minutes, over a mountain road of more than usual roughness, employing three well selected horses for the journey. The last 42 miles he accomplished in 2 hours, beating his competitor by 32 minutes, and getting control of the wire, which was necessarily occupied in the transmission of the Associated Press despatch until it was too late to forward any other.

The New York Times says: "We are not blind to the fact that the Republican party has made some mistakes in finance, the effects of which we yet feel. We have pointed these out from time to time with freedom. But would the Democracy have done better? Would they not have made some of the same mistakes, and some a great deal worse? As far as that party has a policy of national finance, is it not a dangerous and disgraceful policy? With the Democrats originated the wicked, demagogic notion of repudiation, and of practically unlimited currency. Where would the country have been, today, had those ideas prevailed? Would United States notes and the notes of National Banks have been the one thing that everybody clings to and hoards in a time of general distrust?—We do not believe that the Democrats will take much profit from anything they can say on finance."

THE TRIAL OF BAZAINE. Rivière's report against Bazaine says that 11,000 soldiers of the army that surrendered at Metz died while prisoners in Germany. It would have been preferable and more glorious if there lives had been lost in a sortie from the city. The honor of the army is symolized in its flags. Bazaine instead of destroying those flags and thereby lessening the humiliation of the surrendered delivered them to the enemy. The accused held no review and never visited the ambulances. Duke d'Aumale, President of court martial Saturday ordered Bazaine's justificatory memoir to be read. It deals briefly with, with only the chief points of indictment; refutes the events and leaves the charges unanswered; holds officers responsible for bad execution of the movement ordered; regrets that they have now turned against him, and concludes with the statement that events were stronger than the writer, whose conscience reproaches him with nothing. The President directed the prisoner to rise and remain standing during the reading of the heads of the indictment. The Marshal exhibited cold emotion when this part was touched. Bazaine he is accused of not doing everything demanded by duty and honor.

The Governor and Council of Massachusetts have voted not to approve of the location at Watertown, recommended by the Prison Commissioners for the new State Prison.

THE WARREN MURDER
THE DEFENSE.

ROCKLAND, Oct. 13.

In the murder case this morning Dr. Walker was called by the defense and testified as to the appearance about the bed, which went to corroborate defendant's testimony.

Warren Mabe, at whose house the murder occurred, test fied that the inside cellar door was fastened with a hasp outside, and that the door leading from the cellar into the house was not fastened. The front door was locked and open. He was in the bath at the time of the murder. He saw a knife in the stand drawer, also a paper which was taken out with it. The knife has Dr. Baker's name on it.

Two other witnesses testified that the front door would stand open at any point except where the spring, when it would swing forward.

W D Bacb called as an expert with fire arms identified a cartridge shown him, was a fifty two cartridge for rifle or pistol. A cartridge would not drop out of any kind of a revolver when fired.

F M Studley identified a note which was written by Dr Baker.

Conversation had with Baker by this and another witness was excluded.

W H Spear, living next north of the Mank house testified to seeing Dr Baker call there on Mr Lucy Ann coming out of the field at one o'clock p m, on the day of the murder.

REBUTTING TESTIMONY.

The defense closed here and the prosecution introduced rebutting testimony.

George D Baker testified to seeing Arthur Mank, his wife, mother and Roscoe at Arthur's house after 5 o'clock on the night of the murder.

A M Wentworth testified that he saw the contents of the drawer the day after the murder, and did not see the knife, paper or razor.

Samuel Thompson, a few days after the murder, saw the front door swing to after it had been standing open.

Susan Simmons was shown the letter referred to in the prisoner's cross examination and testified to having received it three years ago this April.

W C Hoit was called as an expert and identified certain letters he had examined to have been written by the same hand.

THE EVIDENCE CLOSED.

At the opening of the Court this afternoon the County Attorney offered a letter claimed to have been written by the prisoner, the same to which Mrs Simmons testified to receiving and one of those examined by the last witness for the purpose of disproving the statements made by the prisoner. A sharp discussion arose between the counsel as to its admissability, at the end of which the letter was excluded by the Court. The testimony was closed here Mr Pillsbury commenced his argument for the defense at 3 o clock and will occupy at least half the day to morrow.

A TREMENDOUS CRASH

NEW YORK, Oct. 13. The side walls of the four story storage building, No. 13 Tiffany Place, Brooklyn, occupied by Buchanan & Lyle, tobacconists, and Moses, Taylor, soda manufacturer, fell with a tremendous crash yesterday afternoon, carrying everything before them. The walls were 12 inches thick and the structure was erected only four years since. Had the accident occurred on a week day many lives would have been lost.

A RELIGIOUS CONTROVERSY.

A timely publication is this afternoon given to the views of Dr. Tyng, late missionary Bishop of Arkansas, addressed to Bishop Potter of this diocese, and the Dean of Canterbury, England, in the latter for participating in the communion service in the Presbyterian church in this city on Sunday last. Dr Tyng says this conduct of the Dean will be accepted in his country and England as sufficient reason and justification for the Episcopalians attending the attractive services of the Catholic church, and may be used to pronounce the representation that the Episcopal church is a harbor of rest for those tossed by the cruel polarity of doctrines is a delusion and a snare.

THE WORK OF THE ALLIANCE.

Dr Hall writes a letter briefly reviewing the results of the Alliance and closing as follows: The almost good will has been manifested on all hands of the ministers and people of churches, the public institutions, the railway and steamship companies and, indeed, all in any way capable of doing anything for us. The President, have been appreciated cordially and thanked warmly for their kindness. The French and Germans have locked hands in Christian magnanimity, and our people of both nations may well be led to think as they notice the esteem in which the Christians of their fatherlands are esteemed in America for the truth's sake that dwelleth in them. There has been enthusiasm in public meetings, and we doubt not that many a warm friendship has been begun in the homes that extended hospitality. There have been formed, we are glad to believe, many of those strong though invisible links that bind man to man, church to church, nation to nation, and here have been given to all good institutions among us an interest and importance which it will be our fault if we allow to be lost or belittled.

PENSION EXAMINATIONS.

It is intimated that the 2d Comptroller will in his annual report, recommend the repeal of the law requiring biennial examinations of pensioners, the expense to the Government for that service reaching, it is said, at least a quarter of a million of dollars a year, while to dispense with the biennial examinations would not cost the Government the loss of more than $500 or $600.

The Spanish Rebellion!

A GREAT NAVAL BATTLE!

THE FIGHT OFF CARTAGENA!

A CONTEST OF TWO HOURS!

THE REBEL FLEET DRIVEN BACK!

CARTAGENA TO BE BOMBARDED!

ACCOUNT OF THE BATTLE.

A despatch from Cartagena gives the following particulars of the engagement between the Spanish squadron under Lobos, and the insurgent vessels.

Upon appearance off the harbor of the national squadron, the Junta held a consultation and decided to fight, although they had no hope of victory. Some of the garrison were in favor of surrendering the city, but a majority of the men, especially deserters from the national army, were determined on resisting to the last.

PREPARING TO FIGHT.

Gen Contreras and several members of the Junta went of board the Numancia, and all the morning was consumed by the insurgent vessels in taking in coal and provisions. At noon Saturday, everything being in readiness the four vessels weighed anchor and sailed out of the harbor amid loud cheers from the populace and the insurgent troops.

THE BATTLE.

After proceeding a short distance, Admiral Lobos' fleet consisting of the Vittoria, Almanza, Villa de Madrid, Carmen, and two paddle wheel steamers, were met and the engagement instantly began. The fight lasted two hours, when the insurgent fleet was defeated and driven back to Cartagena, their vessels being much damaged

THE DEFEAT—BROADSIDE FIGHTING.

The Insurgents showed great spirit, but handled the ships badly, the Numancia at first having to bear the brunt of the battle alone. The firing at first was at a long range, but at the close of the engagement as the Vittoria was endeavoring to intercept the retreat of the Insurgent frigate Tetuan, broadsides were closely exchanged between these two vessels.

ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS

of the fight show that the rebel ships failed to support each other. The Numancia failed widely. The Tetuan behaved with the greatest gallantry, and was

FREQUENTLY CHEERED

by the spectators on shore, among whom were hundreds of foreigners. She narrowly escaped capture owing to her boldness in coming to close quarters. An attempt was made by the Government fleet to cut off her retreat but failed.

ANOTHER VERSION

A correspondent of the News telegraphs from the vicinity of Cartagena that the naval action was brought on by an attempt of the Insurgent fleet to escape to Algeria.

CARTAGENA TO BE BOMBARDED.

A telegram to the Times says that General Ceballos orders the people living in the neighborhood of Cartagena to quit their houses as a general bombardment by sea and land will soon be commenced.

AQUATIC. The rumor that a rowing match had been arranged between Tracy of this city and [illegible] of Portland, appears to have arisen from very small foundation. When Tracy was in Portland last summer, somebody proposed to get up a match, but nothing definite was settled at that time, nor has any arrangement been entered into since. If the Portland men mean business, there is little doubt that Tracy will be met half way.

PATENTS. The following is a list of patents issued to Maine inventors under date of Sept. 22d, '73, reported by W. F. Seavey, solicitor of patents:

Hiram H. Ford, Guilford, railway time signal.
J. W. Jenkins, Monmouth, shutter-worker
Francis Tighe, Lisbon, sad iron, and coffin.
W. R. Trask, Skowhegan, combined shirt-bosom and lung protector.

THAT SOCIAL AFFAIR. The Commercial of last evening refers to a party at Martin Priest's Saturday evening, and added that "ale was plenty." "One of the party" writes us that there was as well as the host feel somewhat hurt at this statement, as they are all members of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union, and firmly think the ale must have been all in the head of the person who wrote the item, as it was certainly not at the party

PETTY BURGLARIES. Sunday morning the grain store of Jeremiah G. Towle & Co., Broad street, was found broken burglars through a back door. Entrance was effected by breaking out a pane of glass and reaching in and pushing back the latch. The burglars obtained only a few postage stamps and coppers. They left behind them a bunch of keys which are in possession of the police.

The till of the toll house at this end of the Bangor and Brewer bridge, was "tapped" Sunday, and about $[illegible] taken.

TRADE DOLLAR. We were shown yesterday by Dr. Barker one of the new American trade dollars, issued the present year. The coin is somewhat smaller than the old American dollar, bears the [illegible] less of liberty, seated, holding [illegible] and surbounded by [illegible] and commerce, as [illegible] eagle, above which are the words "In God we trust." On the reverse side is the eagle of the United States of America, "Liberty" [illegible] and below, the words "Trade Dollar," "420 grains, 900 fine." The [illegible] and reminds one of the [illegible]

SERIOUS ACCIDENT. A despatch from Winterport states that Samuel Marshall, landlord of the Commercial House, while driving to Frankfort [illegible] was compelled to jump from the carriage on account of his horse becoming unmanageable from fright, breaking his leg and arm in three places. A gentleman from Bucksport was with Mr. Merrill in the carriage, when the horse ran into a telegraph pole and over the fence, throwing the gentleman out with great violence, dislocating his shoulder, and otherwise [illegible] the carriage.

SHINGLE SAWING. Messrs. E. Hamlin & Co., of Collinsville, Mich. write, that sawing accounts of big wood work done at the lumber mills hereabout, they want the following, to see if it is to be in boston: A Mr. Stetson, at work for them, sawed the first week in October, from rough stock, one hundred and forty-one M. shingles, and they have no doubt but he can saw two hundred M. a week and only runs [illegible] hours each day. They use the machine made by Davis and Marshall of Orono, which they think is the most perfect and durable one in use, having run one two years with less than $5 worth of repairs.

MYSTERIOUS WRECK. The wreck of a vessel was discovered on Broad Sound Friday afternoon and towed into Boston. It was a schooner, bottom up, and lashed to the deck was the corpse of a woman, apparently about forty-five years of age, dressed in a dark calico waist and striped woolen skirt. Her head was badly mutilated, and it is probable that she was struck by a piece of timber. The body was delivered to the police for identification. The schooner has since been examined and proves to be the Sparta of this city, owned by Webster Treat, Esq., and laden with lumber for Salem or Boston. The [illegible] of the cabin which held [illegible] probably never be identified, as nothing has been heard of crew or passengers, who it is supposed went to the bottom with the [illegible] of the woman found on the wreck. [illegible] Captain's wife. The [illegible] was in the cabin [illegible] Defense. True Thompson [illegible] talks with you about [illegible] your case, and believes [illegible] the suit and that the [illegible] you; but really you [illegible] man; that suit was [illegible] by property but [illegible] Russell, as [illegible] Russell [illegible] with Dunbar and Black [illegible] have my grandfather [illegible] Oliver Treat, Joseph Kenney, Mrs. B. Hopkins, Jessie, Jessie and Susie Pinkham. The two latter were the captain's grand children, and Susie was but four years of age. Kenney leaves a wife and three children. The body of Mrs. Hopkins was taken in charge by Capt. Edward Hopkins, son of the deceased, who will bring the remains to Winterport on the steamer Katahdin to-day.

NARROW ESCAPE. At a late hour Sunday night, or rather Monday morning, a young man who earns his bread by work on a daily paper in this city, was quietly wending his way up a west side street, in the darkness, carrying under his arm a roll of newspapers, when he was startled by a command to halt uttered in tones that chilled his blood and sent shivers running up and down his spinal column. Thoughts of assassins and highwaymen hurried through his mind, and as a burly man approached, he seized his only weapon—an umbrella—with a fierce grasp, determined to sell his life dearly. The big man came up, a cudgel in his hand. The young man's heart sank within him, as he breathed a prayer for deliverance and wondered, if he was falsely murdered, how in the world his executors would pay his debts. The big man drew nearer, and in the dim starlight seemed to the young chap's eyes taller than the Hammond street church spire. The suspense was dreadful. The youth's voice clung to his jaws and his feet were rooted—he couldn't run. The big man broke the stillness "who in thunder are you, and where are you going?" The little fellow gasped but, "Who are you, and what do you want?" A laugh that to the youth's excited nerves sounded like a lion's roar, followed, and the man who laughed exclaimed, "Hello——, this is you, is it?" Hang me if I didn't think it was a clothes-line thief with his plunder under his arm!" Tableau; mutual explanations, apologies, curtain falls.

NAST AT NORUMBEGA. A large and first class audience greeted Thomas Nast in Norumbega Hall last evening, and when the quiet, unassuming little man, who has done so much of late years in shaping public opinion in America, stepped upon the stage, there could be no doubt of the spontaneity of the round of applause which rose from all parts of the room. This artist is one of those rare persons with whom everybody feels well-acquainted at first sight, and his frank and youthful face and pleasant manner made him a favorite with the audience before he had opened his mouth to speak. He was introduced in a neat little speech by Capt. Small—who protested, and truthfully, too, that no introduction was needed—and the fearless assailant of the Tammany Ring, the intrepid champion of right against wrong, the man whom no intimidation could move, no threats scare, actually blushed as he came forward to the stand. And thereupon the audience applauded again.

In commencing his lecture, Mr Nast premised that no creature but man laughs, or is able to enjoy a joke, and the best nations and people of the world are those who laugh best. Wit and humor are most powerful weapons in the discussion of nearly all topics, and many a deep-laid scheme and project have been fairly drowned out of existence by the laughter of the public, excited by some stroke of pen or pencil. Caricaturing dates so far back that its origin is lost amid the mists of the deluge and its early history is of course little known, but we have many instances and relics which show that it was employed by the ancients with great effect. The lecturer traced its progress in later times, and modestly related, to the delight of his auditors, how he accepted it as a profession—accepted, because his early ambition for high historical art was severely snubbed, and he was forced into a new field of art. In his younger days he delighted in depicting the humorous phases of what he saw, and this inclination has never deserted him. His first political caricature was on the "contraband," soon after Gen. Butler declared the negroes to be "contraband of war," and his success led him to work in this direction. He told of his war with Tammany, how he was alternately threatened and coaxed, how the Ring attempted to bribe him, and how they failed—narrating these matters in a quaint style that was irresistible. The American people, he said, were fun loving, and quick to catch a "point" made on any humbug, always ready to laugh down imposition and pretense, when shown up by the wit of the journalist or the ridicule of the caricaturist.

The lecture was illustrated by frequent sketches in colored crayons on a large screen, rapidly drawn and very effective. Andy Johnson was depicted in crudine, crown and royal robes, as an example of "Cæsarism" and facing him the artist drew the ghost of Cæsarism in the form of a donkey's head, laurel crowned and bodiless—because, as Mr. Nast observed, Cæsar is nobody. Burton, the comedian, whom Nast used to sketch when a boy, was shown as Dodles, and the power to change the expression of a face with a few lines was admirably illustrated. Then to illustrate another point, a colossal sketch of Butler's head was formed on the canvas in a very brief time. Next Tweed was sketched and shown side by side with a well-filled money-bag. Which having a S mark drawn upon it, assumed a startling likeness to the head center of the Tammany Ring. Finally, a comical sketch of the lecturer himself, arrayed in nightshirt and cap, candle in hand, appeared on the screen, and intimated that the lecture was closed. This, like the preceding sketches, was applauded without stint, and the genial artist took his departure heartily congratulated upon his marked success in the lecture field.

THE QUAKER MEETING.

BY CARRIE A. STATLING.

A summer day of quiet peace,
All save the billow's roar,
Where ocean breezes sweep the isle,
And ocean waves the shore.

Sweet Sabbath calm! The cares of life
Hushed in a short repose,
We joined the silent group whose faith
No outward utterance shows.

On plain bare benches sisters sat,
Brothers across the wall;
No voice escaped from those broad brims
No tone from the bonnet gray.

We tried in vain to bring our souls
Into heavenly fitting,
Their bonds were bowed in silent prayer,
Ours should have been, in unison.

For worldly thoughts came creeping in,
We missed the gathered throng,
The frescoed wall, the organ's pipes,
The priest, the prayer, the song!

Amidst unbidden visions came
Echoes we had not heard,
The Quaker Poet* and his dreams
The vacant places filled.

O'er Mary Garvin sunbeams played,
And on Maud Muller's brow,
And turned upon a placid face
Was Barbara Frietchie's now.

Good Parson Avery took his seat
By Andrew Rykman's side,
While next to Abraham Davenport
The Barefoot Boy we spied

The orchard birds sang sweet and clear,
"Pines moaned on Ramoth Hill,
The "lilies" nestled from the "pond
Their "benediction still."

At length the hour for parting came,
Our silence fled in air!
The silent group grasped silent hands
And left the house of prayer.

All this she lesson that we learned
On that sweet Sabbath day,
That loving souls can worship God
Each in his chosen way.

GOOD FOR BARNUM.—The Cleveland Plaindealer tells this charming little story about the showman P. T. Barnum's love for children as proverbial. In Cleveland a little five year old cripple at a friend's house became quite a favorite with the veteran showman, and the child has learned to expect a visit from his kind hearted patron immediately upon his arrival in the city. One morning the little fellow was all excitement as the doorbell rang and Mr. Barnum stepped into the sick room. The usual greeting followed, but a shadow came over the invalid's countenance as he remembered his inability to attend the menagerie. "Never mind," said Mr. Barnum, "if you cannot go to the show, the show must come to you," and then departed. Presently the child, and indeed the whole household was startled at seeing a procession of elephants, camels and dromedaries walk gaily past the house, and halt in the back yard. The little invalid was wild with delight, and stood being held up to the window, cheered merrily at the novel spectacle. The performing elephants gave a matinee, and the beautiful child bolstered up at the window gave his orders with the air of a prince. In half an hour the procession re formed, and under the care of their keeper, the docile but ungainly animals marched quietly back to the menagerie.

WILD PONIES IN MARYLAND.—The Baltimore American tells of of a little district within ten miles of the eastern coast of Maryland where wild ponies are to be seen in abundance, nobody knowing how they came, came there. There is a tradition, however, that some great Virginia gentleman was bringing over a pair of ponies from England some two centuries ago, and that his ship was wrecked, on Assateague Beach. The two ponies were washed ashore and there the progenitors of the little animals that now feed upon the salt marshes of the district. There are now about five hundred ponies in the vicinity. They divide themselves into herds without regard to ownership, and each herd confines itself to a particular range. Each herd is governed by a male, whose authority is supreme. In former times he fought his way up to the position of patriarch by thrashing all his rivals, sometimes driving them into the sea, where they were drowned. The great day on the island is "penning day," although of late it has lost some of its holiday attractions. Men and boys mount fleet ponies and start out to bring in the herds. They gallop all over the pastures grounds, and after much rolling, and riding, and some little swearing they manage to drive one or two of the herds down to the shore. When this herd get started down the shore the riders press close after, yelling and whooping, and there is a lively chase until the avenue that leads to the pen is reached. Here a crowd of men are standing, and they turn the head of the flying column into the square. Some of the ponies suspect treachery and run into the water, but the riders dash after them, and soon the whole herd is forced into the pen.

"I WILL BE HIS FRIEND."—Avery pretty and at the same time characteristic anecdote of President Lincoln is given in a recent number of the New York Ledger. It was during the time that General McClellan was developing his policy of masterly inactivity on the Potomac. The President dropped in to see Secretary Stanton's office one morning and seated himself at a table on which were a number of petitions for appointments to an important position recently vacated, and after looking at one or two of the formidable documents, brushing with influential names, asked the Secretary if he had selected a man for the post. Mr Stanton, replied that he had not, that he found it very difficult to do so on account of the numerous persons who would be offended at an adverse appointment, and he was anxious that particular time to retain the friendship of all. The President continued to look over the petitions, and near the bottom of the pile came upon one bearing the single signature of the applicant "Poor Fellow" said Mr. Lincoln; "there must be a man without friends. No one to speak a word in his favor. And how," simply he asks for the situation—as though it were the office of pedagogue in a frontier school. Do you know the man? The Secretary looked at the paper and said he did, and recalled to the President's mind a young man who had been introduced to him, with is mother, the night before, and in reply to another question said he thought him qualified for the position. "Then, said Mr. Lincoln, "as he seems so entirely friendless among the fruititude who have friends without number, I will be his friend. He shall have one at least." And he picked up a pen and placed his strong autograph upon the margin of the young man's petition. It is needless to add that the person thus befriended received the appointment.

"Thirty-two cents" echoed a woman yesterday, when her grocer charged her that sum for a pound of butter. "Yes, 'um," he replied with a bland smile. "You see the grocer can't carry much of a reserve, and we can't turn out our collaterals at a sacrifice. If the Government calls in the bonds due in 1874, and the importation of bullion tend to ease the money market a little, butter must find its level with everything else. Butter is very panicky just now, but I think the worst is over." She paid the money without further growling.—Detroit Free Press.
